As I type these words, the weather forecast around here is for a wind chill tonight of zero degrees. As you read these words, looking to Easter Sunday, you can be reminded that the dreary darkness and crushing cold has been replaced by “a great getting up morning.” Happy Easter!

Paul understands that the resurrected body is not like anything seen before and the good news is that the resurrection of Jesus is just a sampler (1 Corinthians 15:20f). As Jerry Sumney has written: “Christ’s resurrection is the sample of what the resurrection of believers will be, and God’s promise that such a blessing awaits those who are faithful.”

Eleven years ago, I conducted 400 funerals. Some were for tears, some were occasions for smiles; some were occasions for doubts; some were occasions for shock; some were occasions for relief; some were occasions for despair; some were occasions for praise; some were occasions for memory; some were occasions for expectation. But the core of each of these services is captured in the traditional opening words: “Dying, Christ destroyed our death. Rising, Christ restored our life.”

Amen.

What Someone Else Has Said:
In his book Incarnation (Atheist Press), William H. Willimon quotes another author: Southern writer Flannery O’Connor said, “I am always astounded at the emphasis the Church puts on the body. It is not the soul she (the church) says that will rise but the body, glorified.”

Prayer:
As you prepare your lesson, let your prayer begin: “Thank You, Lord Jesus, for the promise we have seen in You: new life beyond the grave…”

Text: 1 John 3:11-24 “Love One Another”

In about a year, it will be time for the quadrennial meeting of the United Methodist General Conference. It does not take much reflection to come up with a list of items on which there will be intense disagreement: power of bishops, budget expenditures, relationship with Israel and Palestine, accountability…

Perhaps in the year before that gathering, United Methodists around the world ought to focus on the message in this study text: “Love one another.”

John wrote those words (1 John 3:11) in the context of a bitter dispute within the church community (1 John 2:23). To fail to love is a serious matter; John compares it to murder (1 John 3:15).

Interestingly, the New Testament has two different words for murder. One of them (phainō) means deliberate, intentional homicide. The other word (anthropotomos) means unintended consequences that result in death. John uses this second word: Christians who hate (literally “love less”) others effectively destroy them even if it is not intended. It’s not enough to talk a good game (1 John 3:18). Do our actions show love? Does our claim of truth show love?

Family archives record that my grandmother went as they were being rowed to their new home, probably fearing she would never see Church and kin again. Fear does funny things to us.

This week’s study text says that “perfect love drives out fear” (1 John 4:18). John Wesley helps us understand that perfect love means “complete, mature love according to the purpose for which it was intended.” I am intrigued by two words in the New Testament language that can mean “drives out” or “casts out.” One of those words implies a causal, almost mindless action (“I’ll just fling that trash away”). The other word represents a deliberate, purposeful step (“I’ll put this garbage into the garbage can carefully so the stink of this rotten fish does not spread up the house.”) Which word does the writer of 1 John choose? Is it the second word, the one that means there is intention in what is being done? “Perfect love intends to get rid of fear.” That intent comes from our recognizing that we are loved by God. “We love because God first loved us” (1 John 4:19).

Sixteen times in these brief verses, the writer uses the word love (agape). There is no boundary between love of God and love of neighbor. To claim one without the other is to be a liar. That’s strong talk. “Liar” is one meaning of the word we translate “devil.” Yes, fear does funny things to us. But, thanks be to God, so does love.

What Someone Else Has Said: In his biography of Hilly Graham (America’s Pastor: Billy Graham and the Shaping of a Nation, By Love Alone, 1971) Wacker quotes the evangelist: “(The) one badge of Christian discipleship is not orthodoxy, but love. There is far more emphasis on love and unity among God’s people in the New Testament than there is on orthodoxy, as important as it is.”

Prayer:
As you prepare this lesson, let your prayer begin: “Love me into loving, gracious God, that fear may be set aside, overwhelmed by Your grace.”

Text: John 2:15 “Watch Out for Deceivers!”
Last Christmas, my son gave my tickets for the two of us to see our favorite baseball team, the St. Louis Cardinals, play in Washington. I am writing this before Spring training even begins, but I am already looking forward to the game. When you read this, the game was played last week.

Did St. Louis win? Did the game get rained out? Did we have to pay a fortune for parking? Did we get teased as outsiders? Did Kolten Wong steal a base? How was the traffic on the late-night drive back to B.J.’s home in Williamsburg?

Obviously, there is a lot I don’t know yet about that ball game. It is the very uncertainty that adds to the excitement of anticipation. That is something of the spirit with which the writer closes. I hope to visit you and talk with you face-to-face, so that our joy can be complete.” It is one thing to talk about the game; it’s another thing to go to the game. It’s one thing to write about issues in Church; it’s another thing to live them out on a daily “face-to-face” basis.

What is so important that the writer wants to deal with it “face-to-face”? What is so important that the writer is already looking forward to a get-together that hasn’t yet happened?

At the heart of the matter is what some folks were teaching about Jesus Christ. The dilemma was too important to wait until “the elder” (2 John 1) could talk to the community in person, so he writes this letter. Some persons—he calls them “deceivers”—were saying that Jesus was just a spiritual being, saying that he did not come out as a human being (2 John 7). That claim tears at the very heart of the Christian experience. Which echo of John 1:14 must be heard: “The Word became flesh and made his home among us.”

John writes that the loving thing (2 John 5-6) is to honor the truth. Note the blending of “love and truth” in verse 3. Perhaps it is what the writer of Ephesians had in heart and mind when he wrote about speaking “the truth in love” (Ephesians 4:15). Even though the overarching principle is “love,” it is not exclusive of truth. The dangerous “untruth” to which John refers is a denial of the human Jesus Christ. Some students of the Bible refer to this as “Docetism.”

The elder’s advice in this text is to avoid it: Chasing this untruth could even shatter how one is related to the Lord (2 John 8). The writer of these verses is delighted when believers live in the truth (2 John 4). To do so is more than just a pleasant evening to which to look forward; it is a commandment of God (2 John 24).

What Someone Else Has Said: In his influential work Biblical Theology (IVP Academic), Simon Chan draws on David Wells to write: “Wells thinks the answer to the theological vacuum of the evangelical church is to be found in the recovery of truth, not so much truth as abstract ideas and propositions as the truth of God’s action in history, carried in the gospel concerning the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.”

Prayer:
As you prepare this lesson, let your prayer begin: “Lord Jesus, the Way, the Truth, the Life, we pray for that love which you brought alive in your human journey…”

The Use of Money

John Wesley’s sermon on “The Use of Money” includes three simple principles:

- Earn all you can through honest work and unwearied diligence,
- Save all you can through simple living so that you may Give all you can.

During this season of Lent, reflect on your use of money and how you may live a life of simplicity so that you may give all you can to the Owner of all. Explore ways to live more simply at www.FrugalLiving.about.com.
